MAJOR INCREASE IN FACILITIES
PARROT'S BEAK, CAMBODIA

Recent significant changes in both the type and amount of activity have been observed in the northern portion of the "Parrot's Beak" area of Cambodia, 17 nautical miles south-southwest of Tay Ninh, South Vietnam (Figure 1). Since of this year, the number of visible structures increased by 100 percent, and communications facilities were seen for the first time.

photography of revealed approximately 300 insurgent-type structures with associated foxholes, trenches, bunkers, row crops, and automatic weapon positions located along the Cambodian/South Vietnam border immediately north of the village of Ph O Sam. Despite the utilization

Two confirmed communication facilities were also observed in this area, each consisting of one end-fed horizontal antenna, orientated NNW/SSE, with an associated control building (Figure 4).
